

Dr. Eduardo E. Arteaga-Bracho

Dr. Eduardo Arteaga-Bracho is a seasoned clinical development specialist with extensive experience in integrating digital health technologies into the medical devices sector. He holds a Ph.D. and MSc in Biomedical Sciences from Albert Einstein College of Medicine at New York City, USA, with a foundational background in Psychology from the University of Rafael Urdaneta, Venezuela.

Throughout his career, Dr. Arteaga Bracho has been instrumental in the development and execution of clinical development programs for a broad range of medical devices aimed at enhancing patient care and management across various pathologies. His expertise extends to the successful application of digital health tools designed to improve remote patient monitoring and safety.

Dr. Arteaga-Bracho's professional journey encompasses significant contributions to the design, monitoring, and execution of clinical trials that have pushed the boundaries of patient care and drug development through innovative medical device solutions. His work has consistently focused on the advancement of medical practices, ensuring high standards of patient safety and care.

Dedicated to fostering innovation in healthcare, Dr. Arteaga-Bracho has played a pivotal role in developing strategies that effectively combine medical device technology with practical clinical applications, significantly improving outcomes in diverse patient populations.

More information: <https://www.linkedin.com/in/eduardoarteaga/>